

The Jack Russell Inn Drinks Menu & Wine List

Welcome to the Jack Russell Inn

The vision for the Jack Russell was to open a quality, local establishment that has as little negative impact on its surrounding habitat as possible. We source as much produce from the farm and estate: venison, game birds, pigeons, rabbits, many vegetables, fruit & herbs all come from the land.

Besides the food and drink offering, the Jack Russell is designed to run as green as possible. The electricity is provided to us courtesy of a wind turbine on the hill, our water comes from a bore hole on the estate. The warmth provided in the rooms comes from a biomass boiler burning wood pellets sourced from our woodland. We also return water to land through our bio digester waste management system.

We tread as lightly as we can...

*For what we are about to receive,
From the forests and fields of old Faccan-Cumbe,
May we all be truly grateful...*

- Anon

In a Nutshell...

Exactly when Faccan-Cumbe (as it was once known) was established is yet to be determined, but a cluster of barns close to the original site of the village rest on Roman foundations so it is fair to say this has been a home for many centuries.

The old trade routes, carved out of this flinty, chalk-dominant earth will run through our forests and vales for a civilised eternity. Back then (whenever then was) the two valleys to the east and west of where you are now were vibrant farming communities that profited culturally and economically from sitting on busy trade routes to and from London. Even back then we played host to the weary traveller, seeking to make or spend their fortune as they journeyed to or from our nation's capital.

But with such great traffic also came great risk of disease. As the great plague ravaged these green and pleasant hills, the flourishing rural community was slowly decimated. Those fortunate few who survived fled for the high ground and made that their new home and where we now find ourselves today.

So what do we know about this particular (oh-so-modern) version of Far Coombe other than the change of name and a telephone signal as reliable as a hot English summer?

The earliest recorded origins of Facombe as we have come to know it today are found in the Domesday book. Once land that belonged to King John, it was split into three estates & three manors. Facombe Cosyns east, Facombe Netherton down the hill to the west & Facombe Upstreet where you find yourself today.

To condense the most exciting (or grizzly) part of our history into as much of a nutshell as possible: At a court held in 1426 it was presented that the With the help of some local friends, the Cosyn family, who had spent the better part of a century in a bitter feud with the Panchardon family (of Upstreet and Netherton) ambushed the Panchardons at Cosynstreet. John Panchardon, head of the family was beaten to death. When the incident was brought to the court being held at Faccombe Netherton, the Cosyns and their friends arrived heavily armed and put a halt to proceedings. Swift vengeance followed as the kings forces arrested the criminals, hanging all but one of the Cosyns up at the Gibbet on Combe hill. The last remaining Cosyn was eventually forced to sell the estate to the Panchardons. The name of this rebellious family is still preserved in the form of the footpath of Curzon Street and its two barns that were part of the old manor house and are now in the process of being restored by the estate.

Faccombe Netherton and Faccombe Upstreet eventually became the Faccombe and Netherton they are today. Despite "careful watch on the morals of these villagers" fierce rivalries between the two were played out either on the cricket pitch (now the deer park), at cards (in here) or at the churchyard (in Netherton) over a game of skittles, bowls or pat-ball. A number of millers and farmers end up in court and in the clink for failing to pay taxes due to heavy gambling debts and it is reported that even "the tithingman (tax collector) was fined for failing to present inhabitants whose custom it was to play bowls every Sunday".

The Manor

Was built upon the foundations of some of the earliest establishments in Faccombe. What began as a simple farmstead complete with windmill and bakery was eventually inherited and taken over by Allan Borman Heath in 1857. Deciding he liked the view from above he sold his house in West Woodhay and built on the foundations of the bakery, which now happens to be the wine cellar. He transformed the place into the early Georgian Manor you (sort of) see today. The following owners, Cpt. The Hon. Eric Butler Henderson and his wife Sophia were benefactors to the local Andover orphanage. Sophia outlived him by twenty five years. She would plant 100 daffodil bulbs at the start of every season in his memory and when they were in full bloom the orphans would come for tea and pick huge bouquets with potential future parents. Legend has it in the years after her death, when the house was about to be turned into a hotel her ghost could be seen in the fields around Faccombe. When the current family in residence bought the house, sightings were limited to Daffodil season and then disappeared altogether. The ritual planting of the Faccombe daffodil still continues to this day and come the blooming time is

Last Orders For a Fearless Landlady

by Jez Gale (Chief Archivist of the Daily Echo).

IT WAS DUBBED "THE BATTLE OF THE BEER"...!

On one side of the counter stood defiant Winifred Gresham. On the other were the inhabitants of a Hampshire hamlet. They wanted Mrs Gresham out. She was adamant she was staying put.

They alleged - to use court vernacular - she was not 'a fit and proper person to hold a licence.'

In turn, she condemned them as "the most small minded people I have ever met. Their claim is slanderous and a slur on my character."

And she vowed: "I am going to fight this all the way."

It was not so much a fight, almost a war as the battle waged on and on.

The confrontation was all the more complicated because the George & Dragon pub she ran in Faccombe - population 53 - North Hampshire formed part of the estate of Mrs Sophia Butler-Henderson who had died 18 months earlier.

Since then the pub had been sold and the estate's trustees had also taken the villagers' side.

That smacked of "feudalism!" roared Mrs Gresham, convinced the trustees were behind the move to kick her out.

As for the villagers she sneered: "They don't use my pub. I don't have anything to do with this village at all."

So it was down to a judge at Andover County Court on February 21, 1979, to decide her fate.

Mrs Gresham told the court how she had ploughed £20,000 savings into bringing the pub up to bed and breakfast standards since taking over the licence eight years ago.

She won the judge's admiration - but lost her case.

"If it was my task to decide it according to where my sympathies lie, Mrs Gresham would win by a distance," sighed

Judge C S Rawlings. "But I have to make a decision according to the law."

He then granted vacant possession to the trustees with a stay of execution for six weeks.

Her counsel John Powell suggested the trustees should compensate Mrs Gresham - who left the court in a flood of tears - compensation for the 'huge finance' she had put into the business.

The Jack Russell Inn Drinks Menu & Wine List

Typically Mrs Gresham fought on - and again lost at the Court of Appeal in London in July.

"It's like a bad dream," she lamented of the ruling delivered by Lord Roskill.

So on August 10, she was due to go - but her opponents were in for a shock.

At a so called farewell party, dressed in an elegant green evening gown, she stunned villagers by declaring she was not going until the trustees paid her in full for the fixtures and fittings.

She firmly rejected the first offer of £2,500 less £1,300 for rent and court costs.

The trustees of the departed Butler Hendersons came back with a revised offer of £5,000. "The biggest insult yet," she sneered. "I am being victimised and exploited."

Eventually, she left - after a 10 month battle in December - but with a smile on her face.

"I have gotten the settlement I wanted. If the village and the owners had taken a reasonable attitude, there would have been none of this unpleasantness. But when we arrived at an agreement, I was happy to give them vacant possession at the earliest opportunity. They tried to treat me like a serf and failed."

So close to Christmas, she moved into a hotel in Andover, with plans to buy a bungalow.

However, three months later, she announced that she and her second husband George had bought a pub near St Mary Bourne... also named the George and Dragon.

Locals who were friends with George and knew of her reputation would always phone ahead of their pint and ask

"Hey George? Is the Dragon in!?"

As for the George & Dragon, it was sold to Brigadier James Landon who renamed it the Jack Russell.

After three years of planning and much hard work, The Jack Russell was rebuilt and opened in November 2017.
